Out of the chilling rain and fog
That hid the mountain from our sight
A dusky cloud came floating down
At early dawn of light.

The cloud dropped softly to the lake
And a sound of whirling wings
And spread into a graceful line
A host of living things.

We bled this burst of joyous life;
The sunbeams danced dark no more,
When suddenly a shot rang out
And echoed round the shore.

The waterfowl were nature's guests,
But they were doomed, and all that day
The shore pealed forth, and on the waves
The dead and dying lay.

At last into the brooding mist
There vanished, softly it came,
A broken flock, with plume torn,
After that day of shame.

UNINHABITED ISLANDS.

There Are Thousands of Them in the Indian Ocean.

If you should want an island—that is, an uninhabited island—for the purpose of occupying it alone, Robinson Crusoe like, or to use it for romantic fiction or for any other purpose, to the exclusion of all others in the world, you need have no trouble in finding one if you see fit to make a journey to the Indian ocean. In the waters between Madagascar and India you can find more than 15,000 of them, where there is not a human being and where you can, if you will, be monarch of all you survey.

An English traveler has recently been among the small islands that dot the western end of the Indian ocean to make an inventory of them and reports that he counted 16,100 and found only about 600 of them inhabited. Now, there is a good chance for any one who may want an island.

These particular islands are not large, as islands go, but very many of them are sufficient for the purpose of a Robinson Crusoe or any other novel hero or for even a small colony of shipwrecked mariners or other persons who might be cast on one of them or seek for the purpose of making a home pretty much out of the busy world.

Some of them are only an acre or two, well elevated above the tide, while others are a quarter of a mile in diameter and running from that up to a mile or two in length and a quarter or less of the length. In breadth, many of them are granite structures that rise steeply from 20 to 100 feet, well covered with rich soil, through which small fresh water streams hurry to the sea, which they reach after flowing over beaches of glistening calcareous sand that are begirt by coral reefs, which form walls about the islands.

How He Saved His Dinner.

In the little town of Arundel there is a taxidermist who is gifted with wonderful presence of mind. Here is an instance:

Some time ago a gentleman called at his shop with a cock pheasant, which he desired to have skinned, stating at the same time that he did not require the body. This quite suited the taxidermist, who thought the pheasant would do for his dinner on the morrow.

However, later in the day the gentleman called again and said that he would take the body away. The taxidermist replied that it was unusual for customers to take the bodies away, but that he had no objection, and he fetched the bird, which his wife had put on a plate and covered with flour. "Ah!" exclaimed the gentleman, "it looks very nice. But what is this white powder with which it is covered?"

"Oh, that," replied the taxidermist quietly, "is arsenic. I always cover the bodies with that until I can dispose of them."

"Ar-arsenic!" stammered the gentleman. "Why, I thought that the bird was good to eat. Thank you, I won't trouble to take it away with me. Good day."

The taxidermist had saved his dinner.—London Answers.

Rude Justice.

A certain Arizona justice of the peace, whose knowledge of the law was never gained from books or actual practice before the bar, was hearing an assault and battery case. The lawyer for the defense was shouting his arguments when the court said:

"That will do. Sit down."

He then adjusted his spectacles and sagely observed:

"Prisoner, stand up! According to the law an 'it' evidence—there is no evidence—Oh found you guilty, or, an' foin' yez $50. If yez air gully, faith, it's a very light sentence, an' if yez are not gully it'll be a mighty good lesson for yez!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Prudent Scotsman.

A cautious Scotsman, 85 years old, had saved enough to purchase a piece of freehold land upon which he had had his eye for some time. He repaired to the freeholder and opened negotiations for the purchase of the freehold, however, informed him that for some reason or other he could not part with the freehold, but said he would give him a lease for 999 years. This, he was informed, was practically the same thing. "Na, na," said the aged one, shaking his gray head, "time soon runs awa'!"—London Outlook.

THE STEEL WORKERS.

Life of the Strikers and Their Families.

WIVES CHEER ON THEIR HUSBANDS

Women the Chief Sufferers, and They Are Most Bitter and Aggressive in Urging the Men to Join the Strike, Says Grace Ivers—Many Men Fishing or Camping.

Popular fancy during strike times pictures the strikers standing around a campfire with a club in hand determined to repel the invasion of new men. The present strike of over 50,000 steel workers of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers presents no such picture. A stranger can walk by any Pittsburgh life mill and not see but a dozen strikers, says Grace Ivers in the New York World. Hundreds of them have quit the city and while enjoying themselves in sylvan glades hope the strike will last all summer.

Hundreds of mill men who walked out and will not in again until ordered by their officers are enjoying themselves at fishing camps along the Ohio, Monongahela, Youghiogheny and Cheat rivers. Most of them are members of clubs which take a summer outing. Others formed clubs when they saw the strike coming and rushed for the woods as soon as the strike order went into effect. Some of them took their wives and children. Others left their families at home to swelter and gossip about the duration of the strike.

The upper Monongahela river is dotted on both sides with white canvas tents. So is the Youghiogheny. There are few along the Ohio because the fishing is not so good. The McKeesport strikers have half a dozen camps. Every man at Camp Victory has his wife with him. Camp Resolute is now by with 30 single men, who have cooks and servants to wait upon them, as inhabitants.

There are camps at Glassport, Confluence, Monongahela City and other places. Here the men lounge on the grass or in hammocks, fish when they feel inclined, row, bathe and have a good time generally. In the evenings there are entertainments, many of the camps being clever dramatic amateurs and musicians.

The men have worked long and steadily at good wages. Many of the mills had three shifts—that is, ran 24 hours a day with three sets of men, each working eight hours. Labor was scarce all during the strike year which ended June 30, and many of the men worked 10 hours a day. No wonder they dropped from exhaustion at the first spell of hot weather, and no wonder they rushed off to camp hoping the strike will not end until fall. These are the strikers, the better paid class of mill labor, whose wages range from $4 per day upward.

With the common mill laborer and others whose daily wage is below $2 per day it is the women who bear the brunt of a strike. It is their cars which will bear the children ask for bread. And yet in this strike, as in others, the women stand shoulder to shoulder with the men, inspiring enthusiasm in the fighters, and with a determination to help their men out, let the end be what it may.

Miles of streets on the south side of Pittsburgh are built up of the little homes of mill workers, and under each roof beats a woman's heart aching for the strike. A journey through these streets revealed but one sentiment among the better class of women, who lead the spirit.

"My men, I thought today," said Mrs. Tim Blake, a stalwart woman in Gorman's alley, whose hands, wrinkled and shriveled from the family wash-tub, showed a worn wedding ring. "I don't know how long it may last. I don't know much about these things because I can't read, and what I know is only what Tim and the children tell me, but I know it's for the good of the workmen, and no woman who is worth the name will be in that good."

I never was in a strike before except one, when I was just married and had but one child. Then my man went east into the coal mines. He sent me $3 a week, and I lived on that and helped others that hadn't so much. A towheaded urchin clung to his mother's skirt while she spoke and chirped in: "The kids is called 'Amble'—'black lambs'—when their fathers goes in to be black sheep, and I'll never be a lamb. I'm for the strikers, and I'll do without dinner 'fore I'd ask daddy to go back."

Mrs. James McCarty, stout, motherly dame, who sits in the front of her neat house in South Fifteenth street, looked rather disconsolate when the strike was mentioned. She has but one son, a worker in the tin mills, who gets a wage ranging from $8 to $15 a week.

"I don't got no man to look to me," she said. "I got only one boy at home, and he worked hardly any all winter. It's hard work to keep the roof over the head and the bread in the stomach when there's no work to do. But I'm willing for him to strike when the rest does. There ain't no sense in workin' men, not standin' together. They're worked like horses, anyhow, and if they don't stand together they'll be worse than horses."

"I'll put my hand to the wash-tub like any other woman does afore I'll let my man go back without the strike," said John Adams, wife, a small, slim mother, who held a baby to her breast while she talked. "We have a little saved. My husband gets $18 a week, and out of that I can save a little when he works steady, for he's a good man, and he don't drink none. But when the strike's on, he'll go out and wash or I'll beg from door to door."

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. You need not doubt, for it is never thought of using anything else for indigestion or biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower in liquid form, to make you satisfied that there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac.—W. T. Brooks.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Resign to Run For Senate. Charles G. Dawes has tendered to the president his resignation as comptroller of the currency, to take effect on Oct. 1 next. Mr. Dawes is ambitious to represent Illinois in the United States senate and will be a candidate before the state legislature which is to select a successor to Senator Mason. Unlike some men in public life, Mr. Dawes doesn't think it would be in accordance with the proprieties for him to hold his present office while conducting a campaign for the senatorship.

Mr. Dawes entered the office of comptroller of the currency on Jan. 1, 1898, succeeding James H. Eckels.

England's Oldest Scientist. One of the most interesting of our surviving men of science, says the London Daily Telegraph, is James Glaisher, F. R. S., who recently entered upon his ninety-third year. Many people think of the veteran meteorologist only as an astronomer and a fine sample of what a vigorous mind in a sound body can do, hale and hearty at over 92. When he and Coxwell did their seven miles rise into the empyrean and he floated and the aeronaut only saved both of them by gripping the valve rope with his teeth, his hands being numb and powerless, the world was greatly moved with admiration. At the meeting of the British association the next year, 1863, Professor Owen made a noteworthy statement. "Physiologists," he said, "were all agreed that one condition of longevity was the capacity of the chest, and therefore he hoped the increased breathing capacity acquired by Mr. Glaisher and Mr. Coxwell would tend to the prolongation of their lives."

The kindly wish was prophetic. Coxwell died in January, 1899, in his eightieth year. Glaisher still survives and is 92.

Italy's Presumption.

France, Italy, who became famous through his invention of the fierce up-and-down microscope which Emperor William has for some time affected, is today a rich man, for at one time all the young officers of the kingdom with proper pride about them used to rush to his establishment in Berlin to be "fixed up" by the emperor.

Italy's dismissal from the Kaiser's service is said to have been due to his presumption. Feeling secure in his position, one day he jocularly inquired of his majesty, "Well, what do you think about the Chinese situation?" This was too much for the German Kaiser, and Italy was banished from the court.

Box Feature of the Plan is Proving People who live in the country districts of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey and the New England states are just beginning to hear of the new order of the postoffice department at Washington making it part of the duty of the star route mail carriers to deliver mail in boxes put up by patrons along the route.

The first effect is a general protest from the carriers. The box feature is proving quite popular, but every new box which is set up means an extra stop for the carrier and a little longer time on the trip, says the Philadelphia Times. The carriers had ample notice, but they did not figure that their work would be increased materially. Now they think they should be given more money. The department has decided to be reasonable and will encourage the growth of the box service.

The New York Sun is the only newspaper published in the United States to-day which defends the actions of Admiral Sampson and condemns those of Admiral Schley. But little more, however, could be expected of that contemptible sheet. It was also the only paper to defend Sampson when he made the fool assertion that a man could not rise from the ranks to a position of prominence in the navy, because under those circumstances he could not be a gentleman, according to Sampson's definition of that word.

An Odd Will.

George M. Ingels, a former resident of this city, who died last week in Cincinnati, desired to leave his estate in the family line. So to Elizabeth and Louisa—his unwedded daughters—who he thought would remain childless—the old man left only a life interest in his Paris property and the Cincinnati homestead. After their deaths he provided that the same should revert to the estate. All the balance of the $30,000 estate goes to the two wedded sons and two wedded daughters in fee. Before the above goes into effect the widow shall have a life interest.

What Becomes of the Old Stages?

[Mayville Bulletin.]
A query propounded to a veteran bus driver recently as to the whereabouts of the old-time stages which formerly plied between Mayville and Lexington and various other suburban cities elicited the reply that a great many of them were sent West to Missouri, Kansas, Idaho and some to the trails leading to the Rocky Mountain mining camps. There are a few yet in Kentucky centered around near the scenes of their former labors.

A Bottomless Whirlpool.

Another wonder has just been discovered in upper Kentucky river in a short bend two miles above Boone's Knob, which, after the completion of lock No. 9, will be pointed out to steamboat tourists by the crews of passing steamers. It has been named "The Bottomless Whirlpool," because so far nobody has been able to sink a line in it to ascertain just how deep it is. Its disc is about thirty feet and it is away from the foot of a gigantic cliff about ten feet, buzzing with the rapidity of a buzz-saw all the time except when the river in the river is too low for navigation. There have been instances where log rafts have drifted into this whirligig and been torn to pieces in a twinkling. The loosened logs would dance about in it for hours before being forced out of its clutches.

The bottomless whirlpool is in an isolated place that happens never to have been observed by surveying parties who have measured that part of the Kentucky river, because they crossed the cliff it is at the foot of and never passed it on the water surface. The bold hole goes straight down through endless rock and is a wonder to look upon.

Only Twenty-two Left.

Company D., of Colonel Clarke's regiment of Morgan's Command, held its annual reunion yesterday at Mr. Wm. Stepp's, near Clintonville. There are now only twenty-two of the gallant company left to celebrate and cherish their history and trials, and "Squire R. P. Scobee, of this city, is one of them.

At the annual reunion at Colonel Hill-dreth's, in Bourbon county, last year there were twenty-four, but since then two—Jesse Stewart, of Mt. Sterling, and Captain Pendleton, of this city—have passed away and picked their tents, with Morgan and Clarke, on God's eternal camping ground to wait and welcome the coming of those who yet remain.

The occasion yesterday was a happy and most enjoyable one. Everything that exquisite taste could suggest or heart desire was provided to make it such, but it was not without the shadows that made it sad, when they view year by year the thinning out of their comrades, with no one to take their places. It costs a good deal to get the gallant few. Those from here who attended were "Squire R. P. Scobee, Mrs. Jennie Catherswood Bean and Mrs. D. J. Pendleton.—Winchester Sun.

A Mint Julep Tragedy.

"Light, salt, and be welcome," said the planter. "Why," he said, "I saw a nice bed of mint back there. Suppose I get some, and make a mint julep instead of a toddy?"

"A what, sah?" said the planter. "A mint julep. Haven't you ever tried them?"

"No, sah, nevah; but I'm willing, sah."

"They did try the fascinating beverage not once, but many times, and the northern man went away next day with reluctance."

Two years later his business took him there again. At the gate he was met by the old colored butler, whose hat, as he doffed it, was seen a band of crabs.

"He's dead, sah; died yesterday."

"Dead! I'm shocked. What was the cause?"

"Why, sah, 'bout two years ago one o' dem Yankees come down here and showed ole marse how to drink weeds in his red likker, and he never stopped till he died fust it."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Cheap Meals in London.

"Speaking of cheap restaurants," said a gentleman who has just returned from a visit to London to a Washington Star writer, "reminds me of a dining saloon in the Whitechapel district of London where a relishing and fairly substantial meal may be had for a halfpenny, or 1 cent in our money."

This cheap repast is not served up in the shape of a cut from a joint and two vegetables. It is a big brown pie, very juicy and very hot. The absence of beefsteak is evident when you cut the pie, but you find inside a liberal sprinkling of sheep's liver, onions and turnips, and a plentiful supply of gravy.

An Anecdote of General Jackson.

General Jackson, while on one of his journeys to Tennessee about the time of the nullification excitement, arrived at a village in a very important state of mind, both with public affairs and with the state of the roads. The president was entertained as a guest at the house of a lady in the village, and, although he tried to be polite, the state of vexation which he was in affected him visibly.

"No, thank you, ma'am," said the general, continuing to drink.

"But I don't see how you can drink that boiling hot tea without scalding your throat or your eyes."

"No wonder you can't, ma'am," said Jackson. "I am scalding myself."

"But, sir, why do you?"

"Good gracious, ma'am!" exclaimed the general, "don't you see that I want to scald myself?"

The lady refrained from making any further suggestions as to her distinguished guest's comfort.

What We Most Remember.

Memory is for the most part "a trivial fond record" of the affairs of everyday life, and our intense desire not to lose the remembrance of these unimportant everyday matters is one of the greatest testimonies to the predominance of happiness over unhappiness in the world. Do we not feel sorry from our hearts for any one who has lost even an insignificantly precious possession without even wondering whether or not there was anything in their past lives worth recollecting? After all, how few are the hours which any of us would blot out of our lives? These perhaps during which we are witness to or sufferers from physical or mental pain, the moment when we engendered the worm of remorse which dieth not or those few minutes of humiliation which, whether we trace them to fault or fault, remain in our minds to "live like a thing that is raw."

But how small is the part we have taken away compared to the part we would retain!—London Spectator.

An Execution in China.

The poor wretches were made to dig a large square pit, and one by one they were made kneel at the edge with their hands tied behind their backs. A Japanese officer stepped forward and with the point of his sword drew it back and forward over the poor wretch's neck, and then with a swift blow it descended, cutting off the head.

The next one was successful, and then came a terrible spectacle. The Japanese officer, with his sword drawn, drew it back and forward over the poor wretch's neck three or four times before he struck the fatal blow. Down came the blade on the apex of the skull, cutting about two inches into the neck.

The poor wretch fell into the pit, and the Japanese officer, climbing down and saving away at the neck until the head was severed. The heads were immediately carried over to the main road and strung up on poles as an object lesson to the large number of Chinese who were congregated around with blanched faces.—Canadian Magazine.

Recipes for Happiness.

Happiness is not to be procured like hard bake in a solid lump. It is composed of innumerable small bits, and recipes for its acquisition are simple, and therefore we ignore them. Love in marriage, fidelity in friendship, affection between parent and children, courtesy in intercourse, devotion to duty and perfect silence in the evening.

These are the ingredients of a happy life. In the quest for happiness one could not do better than put into practice the precepts of the great Persian: "Taking the first step with the good thought, the second step with the good deed, and the third step with the good deed. I entered paradise!"—Sarah Grand.

An Observer.

A correspondent writes: "I was visiting a friend some time ago and naturally in due time wished to take a bath. So, having left a goodly supply of water into the tub, in 1 I stepped, with much pleasure at the prospect of a delightful scrub, when a most matter of fact voice called out to me: 'My heart stood still with terror, and vainly endeavoring to stretch my washing to the dimensions of a sheet, I glared wildly around and saw a parrot blinking at me from his cage in the window.'—New York Tribune.

The Karroo Bush of South Africa.

The karroo bush provides against drought by roots of enormous length, stretching under ground to a depth of twenty feet. At the end of a month's drought, when the earth is baked blindest from two feet from the surface, if you break the dried stalk of a karroo bush three inches high you will find running down the center a tiny thread of pale green, and this will thrive with sap. Fortnightly Review.

Misinformation.

Little Mabel—Papa, does our family own a planet?

"No, child, nonsense, child! Who put that idea into your head?"

Little Mabel—Why, I asked the teacher last night what big star it was above us, and she said it wasn't a star, but a planet, and that it was Ma's—Town and Country.

It Wasn't Necessary.

"What are you doing, Freddie?" said the painfully smart boy's uncle.

"Drawing pictures on my slate."

"What is this supposed to represent?"

"A locomotive."

"But why don't you draw the cars?"

"Why—the locomotive draws the cars."—Exchange.

An Incorrect Article.

The Lexington Herald of Wednesday contained a column article relating to the Paris Telephone Company and its manager, Mr. Rice, in which there appeared several misstatements. The News interviewed Mr. Rice on the subject, and he seemed more amused than indignant. He said he could not imagine why the author of the article should have written such glaring misstatements unless it was that he had been "seen" by a representative of some other company which was endeavoring to secure an entrance into Paris. Contrary to the aforesaid article, the company represented by Mr. Rice has an exchange, has two operators, day and night, has all necessary poles, wires, linemen, etc., has subscribers, and is hustling for more. Mr. Rice says he is here for business and is anxious to get all the subscribers he can.

With the acquisition of this farm Mr. Haggin brings his total up to virtually 5,000, all of which represents an investment of two or three hundred thousand.

One of Herrmann's Jokes.

The Great Herrmann, the prince of magicians, had considerable fun with a street car conductor in St. Louis, Mo., recently. Herrmann was on a downtown Washington Avenue car, the conductor came through collecting fares and Herrmann had in his hand to give him a ten dollar gold piece. The conductor glanced at the coin and said: "I can't change that. Is that the smallest you have?" "You can't change that," said Herrmann, and in his hand was a fifty cent piece. The conductor glanced suspiciously at him, reached out, taking the coin, when to his surprise it was again a ten dollar gold piece. "Did I not tell you," he said savagely handing the coin back to Herrmann, "I could not change it. You will have to give me something smaller, or else get off the car. The company does not make change for anything over two dollars."

"Well, you will have to change this, then," said Herrmann, and there in his hand was the fifty cent piece. "Say, what is this anyway?" said the conductor; "have I got them?" "I don't know," said Herrmann, "whether you have or not, but if you don't change this coin and stop annoying me, I shall report you to the company." "Well, I'll be damned," said the conductor, as he rang up several fares by mistake, and the crowd, who had recognized Herrmann, roared with laughter.

Herrmann will open the season of 1901-1902 at the Grand in this city on August 23, and his engagement will undoubtedly be a big success, as it is being looked forward to with a great deal of interest.

Mr. Thomas Eades, a well known contracting plasterer of Lexington, died suddenly in that city Wednesday of rheumatism of the heart. He was seventy years of age, but active, energetic and preserving. Mr. Eades was born and reared in this city, but moved to Lexington several years since, where he has since resided, being regarded as one of the city's most enterprising citizens. He leaves a widow and two children—a son Asa Eades, of Versailles, and a daughter, Sallie Perkins. Mr. Eades was a brother of Mrs. B. E. Knapp and Mrs. Mary Abbott, of this city. While a resident of this city he did the plastering on several of our oldest buildings, among them being the furniture house of Mr. George W. Davis. The interment will take place in the Paris cemetery, where his parents are buried in the family lot.

SLICING A RATTLER.

THE COLORADO WAY OF TURNING THE DANGEROUS TRICK.

"Did you ever see a cow puncher kill a rattlesnake with a knife?" said a Colorado citizen now in town. "When I first went west, I punched cattle on the Sunset ranch, one of the largest in southern Colorado. I was a tenderfoot, fresh from the east, but I was not afraid about me. That saved me a lot of trouble. The boys were dead willing to put me next, even to a 14-year-old broncho never later broken. Among other things, I learned how to kill a rattlesnake with a knife. I killed one with a knife to make my standing good, but after that a gun or a pitchfork was good enough for me.

"I have seen a plainsman ride up to a small rattler, jump off his horse, strike and as the rattler came down place a blow upon its neck, coolly take a knife from his belt and dispatch it. I have also seen a live rattler thrown up on a haystack machine, and I have seen the man working out at a stack jump, roll, tumble and slide to get away. They could not see the rattler; that was all. In the open they would have played with it.

"A rattlesnake is harmless out of coil. For that reason it wastes no time in getting back into coil after the spring. It will not strike unless it is perfectly sure it can reach its object. Therefore the cowboy must get into reach of the snake's spring. It can spring half its own length, and sometimes more. Of course the larger the snake the more coils, and the more coils the more vicious the strike.

"Dick Haynes was a young daredevil who would go out of his way to play with a rattler. I have seen him kill at least a dozen with a knife, and I saw him when he got such a close call that he dropped the game and used a gun forever after.

"We were out together one Sunday. It was warm, and as we rode he fanned his face with his sombrero. Suddenly he clapped his hat on his head and started his broncho on a lunge. 'Watch me get that pison,' he shouted.

"Fifty yards to our right was a rattler. It was trying to get away, but we headed it in an instant and were on it. It immediately coiled, and then I saw the biggest snake I have ever seen. It was a diamond rattler and about 20 years old. It had the ugliest head I ever saw, enormous in size, and with a mouth that revealed me of a bulldog's jaw. Dick stopped just long enough to size up its length so as to get an idea of its spring, and then went in on it.

"The strike came like a flash of lightning. The snake struck the ground with a sound like the cracking of a fork. Horse whiplash in the hands of an expert. Dick just saved himself by throwing his body back full length. The snake coiled again before Dick could get to it. I got nervous and called to him to shoot it.

"That's the first one that ever struck at me and got back," he said, 'and I'm going to have that pretty head.'

"The rattler was beside itself with rage. It lay, coil upon coil of smooth, glistering length, showing the long, round, and powerful spring in reserve. Out of the coils two feet more of body and neck rose straight in the air, and above all that black, venomous head, with glowing eyes and forked tongue, waved, slightly, to and fro.

"Dick stopped in his tracks, more cautiously. He reached the knife nearer and yet nearer to that swaying head. I knew he was getting too close, but I feared to speak to him. Then came the strike, with a rattling, rattling dart of speed. Dick's knife dashed, and the snake lay squirming, a headless thing, upon the ground.

"Let's get to camp," said Dick. 'It got me in the thumb.'

"We jumped for the saddles and started on a mad run for home. Dick rode with his thumb on the saddle horn and his knife in his other hand.

"If she begins to swell, off she comes," said he.

"We reached the ranch, and while Dick poured the whiskey we examined the thumb. We could find nothing, not the slightest wound. The snake had struck the handle of his knife, and the strength and suddenness of the impact made Dick lose his nerve. I saw a good thing for him. He never went after a rattler again without a long '44.'—New York Sun.

"I see a Wisconsin man claims to have solved the perpetual motion problem."

"That's nothing. I have a model of a perpetual motion machine at my house now."

"Does it work successfully?"
"From the standpoint of perpetual motion, you bet it does."

"Have you given it a name?"
"Sure."

"What do you call it?"
"Jimmie," said he 5 years old his last birthday.—Chicago Post.

Consentation to Superintendence.

AN OCEAN CEMETERY.

THE MOST DEADLY TRAP FOR SHIPS IN ALL THE WORLD.

Dare, Bravest and Tallest Quessant, the Notorious Island of Terror, and the Awful Forests That Supply It With Wood in Plenty.

Far out in the Atlantic ocean, off the northern French coast, almost due west from Brest, lies a great rocky island that is one of the most deadly traps for ships in all the world. It is the island of Quessant, the notorious Ile de l'Epouvante, the island of terror. Rare, without a tree to break its monotony. It lies in the path of the ships seeking the English channel. If they steer too far north, the hundred shoals and reefs of the British coast open their jaws for them. If they sail too far south, Quessant reaches for their bones.

Black and far away from any other land as the island of terror is, it still has its population. What mysterious thing is it which attracts that population and makes it cling? The infrequent visitor sees funny docks of little sheds, scarcely taller than large as hares. He sees small herds of rough coated ponies almost as shy as the sheep. These are the only signs of productive industry to be seen. There is fishing, of course, but fishing can be prosecuted better from the mainland, with less risk and a more convenient market.

What is the mysterious attraction, then? So asked Alexander Shuette, the traveler, when he made his way from the coast of Brittany to Quessant. The answer came, at least in part, one evening when a great storm swept in from the Atlantic and beat at the shores with unexampled fury.

He says: "The daughter of my host-ess led up the narrow staircase to my room. As I ascended I noticed, without remarking the oddity of it at the time, that the staircase was of shiplike timbers, and was shaped into a large, low chamber, completely paneled from top to bottom. Putting the lamp on a huge oak table that shone like a mirror, she said:

"If you should need more firewood, monsieur, you will find it in the next room. Do not spare it. It is better cold, and there will be more than enough firewood in Quessant in two or three days. Good night."

"I sat down before the blazing fire and prepared for a cozy evening. A storm raged in the narrow straits of the little village. The surges thundered against the granite breast of the coast like endless artillery fire, and sometimes I imagined that the very island trembled under the onslaught of the hundreds of millions of tons of water.

"As I sat listening I gazed into the flames. The wood struck me as strange. And then I wondered. On the outside island there is not a single tree, and yet I had been told not to spare firewood. There will be more than enough in two or three days."

"I arose and opened the door into the next room. That room was possibly 50 feet high and was filled almost to the top with timber. First with wood, then with growing awns, I gazed at the piles of wood. Truly she was right, the little maid, when she said that one need not be economical with firewood on the island of Quessant.

There were timbers of every shape, splintered masts and spars, planks from decks and sides, remnants of a steering wheel, beeches from the forest, yellow, black, brown, white and red woods, even two figureheads, some bright as they were new, some crusted with shells and hung with seaweeds. In the entire room there was not a piece of wood that did not come from some wrecked ship.

"When I returned to my room, I took the lamp and examined the place closely. I noticed a strange, delicate, yet very insistent fragrance—sandalwood. Thick wooden pillars supported the ceiling. They were of a beautiful dull black—ebony, as I lived. The panels were of mahogany and cedar. Even an unpracticed eye could see that all these precious woods once had ornamented the cabins of noble ships. The heavy carved chairs, the polished oaken table, even the bed in which I was to sleep, all came from shipwrecks.

"Now I understood the meaning of the words 'stand away' in favor of this island, far away from the world and murderous for the ships that tie the world together. Quessant, with its hoards of the woods, is more fruitful than is Ceres to the mainland, with her harvest moon and her blessings of fruit. The blessings of Quessant come from the gale.

"The forests of Quessant! Are there others in the entire world, so unique, so terrible? This forest, instead of trees, has the mighty masts of ships. In that tremendous forest are the oaks and pines of Canada and Maine, the cypress of Florida, the baobabs of Africa, the teak of Hindustan, the ebony and sandalwood of South America. The awful forests of Quessant form the visible apex of a vast cemetery that stretches from New York to Cape La Hague."

Before the Footlights.
"I understand that young man who calls on you," said old Mr. Stratton, "wants to become an actor."

"Humph! The next time he calls, you'd better warn him to think of disappearing before the footlights."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Forewarned, Forearmed.

The liability to disease is greatly lessened when the blood is in good condition, and the circulation healthy and vigorous. For then all refuse matter is promptly carried out of the system; fermentation would take place, the blood becomes polluted and the constitution so weakened that a simple pleuro-pneumonia would result seriously.

A healthy, active circulation means good blood and strong, healthy nerves.

As a blood purifier and tonic S. S. S. has no equal. It is the safest and best remedy for old people and children because it contains no injurious, but is made exclusively of roots and herbs.

No other remedy so thoroughly and effectually cleanses the blood of impurities. At the same time it builds up the weak and debilitated, and renovates the entire system. It cures permanently all manner of blood and skin troubles.

Mr. E. E. Kelly, of Urbana, O., writes: "I had eczema on my hands and face for two years. I was unable to do any work, and my doctors did me no good. I used all the most advertised ointments and salves without benefit. I used S. S. S. and in a few days it was as clear and smooth as any one's."

Mrs. Henry Blagden, of Middletown, N. Y., says that after two bottles of S. S. S. she cured her skin disease. Send for our free book, and write our physicians about your case. Medical advice free.
